

America's Fence & Deck Builds Aluminum Pool Fencing for Swim Season

August 20, 2026

WARRENTON, MO - August 20, 2026 -
With backyard pools in heavy use across eastern Missouri this time of year, closing them off has become one of the first calls homeowners make once the water goes in. America's Fence & Deck completes dozens of similar projects every summer. One such project, a black aluminum fence wrapping a large wooded lot around a new in-ground pool in the Warrenton area, is a typical example of a safe pool option the company is frequently installing.

The company has worked in fencing across the Warrenton and St. Louis Westplex area for more than 30 years, and it holds an A+ rating from the Better Business Bureau. Owner Nick Johnson runs the business as a licensed and insured contractor and stays hands-on with the jobs his crews take on. Across three decades in the area, the company has seen pool installs bring fencing work with them, since a yard with an open pool rarely stays that way for long. On pool projects the fence has to do more than mark the property line. It works as a safety barrier that stands up to daily use.

The project covered a large, open backyard bordered by trees, where the homeowners had just put in an in-ground pool and wanted the yard closed off before the family started swimming. America's Fence &

Deck won the work over several competing bids. The lot gave the crew room to work but little natural screening, so the fence had to define the pool area cleanly on open ground. The crew installed a black aluminum ornamental fence, a metal style with slim vertical bars that encloses a yard without blocking the view of the tree line behind it, finished with a self-latching gate, the detail most pool barriers are judged on.

Aluminum holds up around water because it does not rust through or warp after a summer of sun and splashing, one reason it suits an enclosure that gets daily use. The crew anchored the posts in concrete footings dug for Missouri's clay soil and freeze-thaw swings, so the perimeter would not work loose over the first few winters. Spaced pickets also let air move and keep sightlines open across the yard while still holding a firm line around the water.

The harder test came after the job was finished. When a household pet later damaged a section of the fence, the crew came back and repaired it to its original condition rather than leaving the homeowner to sort it out. Standing behind a finished fence, well after the crew has packed up, is part of how the company treats the work.

"Around a pool, the fence is doing a real job, not just looking nice, so the anchoring and the gate hardware are where I see other outfits cut corners," said Nick Johnson, owner of America's Fence & Deck. "After 30 years I can walk a yard and tell you where a cheap install is going to loosen up in a season or two. We set it to hold, and if something happens to it down the road, we come back."

The company installs aluminum, vinyl, wood, and chain link fencing along with gates and repairs for homeowners across the region.
