

Crusaders Fence Highlights Accreditation as Homeowners Vet Contractors

September 25, 2026

CULPEPER, VA - September 25, 2026 -

Home improvement is consistently among the business categories the Better Business Bureau fields the most inquiries about nationally, and local BBB officials say questions about contractor legitimacy tend to rise every fall as homeowners push to finish outdoor projects before winter. Crusaders Fence, a licensed and insured fence installation company based in Culpeper, VA, points to its Better Business Bureau accreditation as one way Central Virginia homeowners can check a contractor's standing before signing a contract this season.

The accreditation required Crusaders Fence to pass a Better Business Bureau review of its complaint history and business practices, a screening that goes beyond the star ratings and project photos most homeowners see on a company website. The company holds accreditation through the BBB's Richmond, VA chapter, which lists its Culpeper service address, and displays the BBB seal on its website with a link to the full report. Crusaders Fence also holds Virginia contractor license number 2705197740, and founder Conall Finn has spent more than 10 years installing fences across Central Virginia before opening the company in 2025 alongside business partner Vernon Jones.

Complaints tied to unlicensed or unverified home-improvement contractors tend to follow a similar seasonal pattern, according to consumer-protection groups, as homeowners hire quickly to beat the first hard freeze. Virginia's Department of Professional and Occupational Regulation maintains a public license lookup tool that lets a homeowner confirm a contractor's license number and status within minutes at no cost. A contractor's license number, insurance certificate, and BBB standing can each be checked independently of what is printed on a company website or a truck door, and Crusaders Fence's status with all three is publicly posted.

Skipping that verification step shows up later in the paperwork. Crusaders Fence handles fence permits, homeowners association submissions and VA811 utility marking, the state service that locates buried gas, water and electric lines before digging starts, on every project it takes on. An unlicensed installer who skips those steps can leave a property owner responsible for code violations or utility damage a licensed contractor would have caught first. That gap tends to surface only after the fence is already in the ground.

Crusaders Fence installs wood, vinyl, aluminum and chain-link fencing across Fredericksburg, Stafford, Spotsylvania, Culpeper and the surrounding Central Virginia counties. Aluminum installations run heavily toward pool enclosures, where Virginia's residential code sets a minimum barrier height of 48 inches and requires a gate that latches and closes on its own, a safeguard meant to keep a young child from wandering in unsupervised. Ranch and paddock fencing for horses and livestock, usually wire mesh reinforced with wood rails, makes up a large share of the company's rural work. Gate work is limited to manual installations, not automated systems.

Conall Finn, founder of Crusaders Fence, said the questions homeowners ask before signing a contract have changed since he started in the trade more than 10 years ago. "People used to just ask about price," Finn said. "Now they ask to see the license number and look up the BBB listing before they'll even schedule a walk-through."

Homeowners across the Fredericksburg region can reach Crusaders Fence at (540) 272-0823 to schedule a free, on-site estimate, with financing available through Enhancify for qualifying projects.
