All Pro CS Decks Expands Shade Structures and Pergola Services

November 24, 2026

COLLEGE STATION, TX - November 24, 2026 -
All Pro CS Decks, a deck and outdoor living contractor based in College Station, Texas, has expanded its shade structures and pergola services to give homeowners across the Brazos Valley a wider range of options for covering patios, decks, and pool areas. The expanded lineup formalizes design and installation work on permanent and freestanding structures alongside lighter, removable coverings suited to the region's long, hot summers.

The broadened service now covers attached and freestanding pergolas, shade sails, retractable canvas shades, patio umbrellas, and temporary canopies, each matched to a property's solar orientation, budget, and existing outdoor spaces. Permanent pergolas anchor to a home as a lasting extension of the exterior, while freestanding versions stand alone as decorative features that require no attachment to the house.

The expansion responds to sustained demand for shade in a part of Texas where summer temperatures and strong sun exposure limit the hours that uncovered outdoor areas can be used comfortably. Shade sails built from high-density polyethylene block roughly 95 percent of ultraviolet radiation and remain water-resistant, which extends the practical use of decks and patios during light rain and peak afternoon heat.

"The expansion gives homeowners a single source for permanent and temporary shade instead of piecing the work together across several trades," said Hector Garcia, owner of All Pro CS Decks. "Matching the structure to the site and to the way a family uses the yard is what determines whether the investment lasts through Texas weather."

Among the removable options, retractable canvas shades adjust with a pulley system so the amount of cover can change through the day, and pop-up canopies fold down for storage between uses. Patio umbrellas remain a low-cost, quick option for covering a single seating area, while temporary canopies suit seasonal setups that do not stay in place year-round. The distinctions matter because pieces left exposed through storms and constant sun wear faster than fixed structures engineered for permanence.

Permanent pergolas can be built to hold ceiling fans, fixtures, and drapery, and their posts and beams are sized to stand up to wind and heavy sun over years of use. Shade sails and canvas coverings rely on hooks and steel or timber posts and can be taken down when a season ends or a storm approaches, a flexibility that fixed roofing does not offer. Choosing between the two often comes down to how permanent a homeowner wants the change and how much maintenance the household is prepared to take on.

Pergola projects can require a building permit depending on whether a structure attaches to a home and on local code, and All Pro CS Decks reviews municipal requirements and handles permitting for jobs in College Station and the surrounding area. Customization spans materials, finishes, and dimensions, from rustic timber to cleaner modern framing, so that each cover fits the scale and style of the existing home and landscape.

The timing reflects a stretch of the calendar when heat in the region stays high into the fall and many homeowners begin planning outdoor projects for the next season. A design consultation compares the covering types against a property's layout, sun angles, and intended use before any structure is built, which the company frames as the step that keeps the finished result matched to the site.

The service reaches beyond College Station to Bryan, Brenham, Caldwell, Navasota, and other Brazos Valley communities, where the same mix of heat and outdoor living has raised interest in covered patios and pool decks. The added structures complement the deck, porch, patio, and hardscape projects the company already builds, allowing shade to be planned within a larger outdoor design rather than added later.
