Coddington Design in San Francisco, California, was recently mentioned in an article on HGTV.com. The article, titled "Think Pink: 20 Pink Spaces That Go Beyond Millenial Pink" features a living room scene decorated by Melanie Coddington, owner and designer with Coddington Design.

"It was certainly an honor to be contacted by HGTV," says Coddington. "I have always loved using pink and am beyond excited that it has become such a popular decorating color right now."

Coddington explains that pink is timeless to her and that she regularly incorporates the color throughout her design with seasonal pillows and tabletop accessories. What was featured on HGTV was a sleeper sofa that was designed around a lilac tinged pink silk velvet. The sofa was added to a contemporary family room to show that pink can be used in any room and for any gender and that it adds just the right touch of elegance to any room. "I am just so pleased to be able to add my love of pink in a design that will be seen by so many," says Coddington. "I've always been a fan of the color and believe that it should be utilized much more than in modern design, or even in traditional designs. The color is ultimately timeless."

She is a California native and the founding principal of the design firm.
