Doll Collectors of North Park has recently shared a story that has gone viral on Facebook and other social media platforms. The story involves a Kansas truck driver babysitting his daughter's doll while on the job. The doll collecting club in San Diego shared the video and photos on its official Facebook page.

The story is about Trent McCain, a truck driver who was asked by his nine year old daughter Joselyn to babysit Abbie, her doll. The child wanted her father to keep the doll with him at work all day. He obliged, and what followed was a string of photos that have made their way around the world and back.

The story about the doll sitter can be seen at <http://www.nydailynews.com/news/national/trucker-babysits-daughter-doll-work-takes-adorable-pics-article-1.2682448>. "It's such a heartwarming story," says a spokesperson from the Doll Collectors of North Park.

McCain told a news reporter that he did not believe his daughter would remember asking him to babysit for the doll, but she did. The child then went to a neighbor's home to monitor the babysitting task from Facebook, even going so far as to send her father instructions for the doll's care. McCain shared photos on Facebook of their adventures that day, photos that have been shared and viewed hundreds of thousands of times since they first hit the internet.

The father stated that he felt it would be best to have fun with the task, and then reposted the same pictures on his company's Facebook page. "We love that he's so in tune with his daughter, and that he's helping to build a future doll collector," says the spokesperson for the Doll Collectors of North Park.

In the shared images, viewers will see Abbie the doll standing on a truck filled with wheat and waiting to get into the truck while it's being loaded. McCain even shared pictures of the doll "eating" a Slim Jim stick and enjoying a can of soda. He says that his daughter did not approve of the "meal" but he assured the child that the doll did not complain about her "food".

The story has gone viral, with many praising the dad for his enthusiasm with his daughter.
