

Avasia Launches Muslin Bibs Squares For Newborns

July 28, 2016

July 28, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Beaverton, Oregon based Avasia, a family business that offers products for expectant mothers, has announced that they will be launching their first non-supplement product. The company recently revealed that they will be offering organic muslin bibs for newborn babies.

"Our bibs are 100 percent organic cotton, and sourced from a women's cooperative in India," says Natasha Avasia, spokesperson for the company. She states that they are manufactured with the highest quality of muslin cotton.

Avasia states that the organic cotton used to create the muslin bibs will be undyed to ensure that they are safe for baby skin, which could be sensitive to certain chemicals. The company says that this new product for babies will be followed by others as they attempt to provide a full range of products for parents and newborns.

The company is a provider of a range of prenatal supplements, but has recently added products for newborns. The new muslin bibs, which can be seen at www.avasia.com are produced from high quality fabrics, according to the company. Avasia states that this is the first of many similar products that they plan to roll out.

"We want to provide a full range of products for mothers, dads, and babies," Avasia states. "Not only for their health, like our prenatal products, but for their comfort, their safety, and their overall convenience."

The company states that they chose this particular product because of the various benefits that organic muslin offers. Avasia says that in addition to being a more comfortable material, all natural muslin is much safer for babies because it does not contain chemicals that are often used in the manufacture of various clothing and other materials.

Those interested in learning more about various other products that the company offers, can read more on their official website. Avasia states that interested parents or consumers can also follow them on their official Twitter page at <https://twitter.com/AvasiaPrenatal>, to check when the muslin bibs will become available. Customers can also get other information and updates about new products that they plan to release from this social media page.
