Estate Sale Company Sets Three-Day Seller Payment Standard

November 16, 2026

SAN DIEGO, CA - November 16, 2026 -
San Diego Liquidation and Estate Services Inc. has set two commitments for every estate sale it runs in San Diego: a prompt first consultation at the family's home, usually the same day or the day after first contact, and payment to sellers within three days of the sale's completion. The company made the decision so that families working to a house sale or probate schedule know from the first phone call what will happen and when.

San Diego Liquidation and Estate Services Inc. provides estate sales for families, executors, and trustees across San Diego, managing each sale at the family's property from the first walk-through to the final day. A marketed sale typically runs two to four weeks from consultation to completion, and the two commitments sit at either end of that period. Sellers are paid by check, cash, Venmo, Zelle, or direct deposit, and the first consultation is free and carries no obligation.

Between the consultation and the payment, each sale follows the same sequence. Staff sort the contents, price items using comparable sales and condition, and carry out staging and merchandising so that each room presents its contents clearly to buyers. Targeted marketing brings buyers to the house, and preview days, typically one or two ahead of the main sale, give them an early look at what is on offer. Full details of each stage are published on the company's website.

The decision is aimed at the deadlines that usually sit behind an estate sale. A house in escrow has a closing date, a probate filing carries its own schedule, and an executor often cannot plan the next step until it is clear when the contents will be gone and when the proceeds will arrive. An early first visit and a fixed payment window give those families a clear starting point and a firm payment date to plan around from the outset, rather than waiting to learn them partway through the process.

"Most families who call us are working to a date they didn't choose, and the first thing they want to know is what happens next and when," said Yahnn Kraveichvili, Owner and President of San Diego Liquidation and Estate Services Inc. "That's why we hold every sale to the same two commitments: we get out to the house quickly, usually the same day or the next, and sellers are paid within three days of the sale finishing. Families don't need to be at the house while the sale is on, and a lot of them find it easier not to be."

Not needing to be at the house during the sale carries particular weight for executors who live outside San Diego County and for relatives who would rather not watch a parent's belongings change hands. The company's own staff run the sale days on site, with the team scaled to the size of the estate, so a family can leave the sale entirely in the company's hands. Families who do so are handing it to a licensed, bonded, and insured business, which holds a California auctioneer surety bond.

Much of the work is in long-held family homes in established neighborhoods such as Clairemont, Point Loma, and Mission Hills, where several decades of furniture, collections, and everyday household contents are often sold in a single event. Homes of that kind take time to sort, price, and present, and the length of that work varies from one house to the next. Every consultation is held by appointment at the family's home, where the sale itself also takes place.

Once a sale closes, unsold items are cleared under the company's broom-clean service, leaving the house empty and ready to be handed over. For families, executors, and trustees working to a closing or handover date, that leaves one less task to arrange. Further information about the company and its sales is available on its Facebook page.
