Top Tier Bourbon Tours Highlights Winter Evening Bourbon Tours

November 18, 2026

LOUISVILLE, KY - November 18, 2026 -
Top Tier Bourbon Tours is highlighting its winter evening bourbon tours as bookings open for the colder months. Designed for bourbon enthusiasts and visitors looking for a more personalized distillery experience, these private outings combine specialty tastings, candlelit rickhouse visits, fireside food pairings, and private transportation. The seasonal format offers a different way to explore Kentucky's bourbon culture, with an emphasis on distinctive pours, the whiskey-making process, and the atmosphere of the region's historic distilleries.

The winter evening experience incorporates several elements that distinguish it from a traditional daytime distillery visit. Guests can enjoy allocated bourbon pours, including higher-proof and older expressions that may not be available on standard tasting menus. Visits to rickhouses by candlelight provide an opportunity to explore the environments where bourbon matures, while fireside pairings bring local food into the tasting experience. These activities create opportunities for guests to spend more time discussing individual expressions, flavor characteristics, and the influence of barrel aging.

Top Tier Bourbon Tours is based in the Louisville area and organizes private itineraries throughout three major Kentucky bourbon destinations: the Bardstown region, the Frankfort and Lexington area, and downtown Louisville. Depending on group interests and availability, itineraries can include established distilleries such as Maker's Mark, Woodford Reserve, and Buffalo Trace, along with smaller craft producers. Standard tour experiences typically include two full distillery tours with tastings and an additional tasting stop, giving participants exposure to multiple producers and approaches to bourbon making.

Transportation is included throughout the experience, with private pickup and return service from guests' lodging. This arrangement allows groups to travel together between distilleries and tasting locations without coordinating separate vehicles. The company operates a vehicle that accommodates up to 12 guests, making the experience suitable for couples, small groups, and private gatherings. Transportation is also available for optional evening activities, including visits to cocktail and cigar bars as part of customized tour schedules.

Co-owner Jonathan French brings more than a decade of experience in the bourbon industry, including previous work with a major bourbon producer. Having grown up in Kentucky, French offers familiarity with the state's bourbon traditions and production practices. His experience informs discussions about mash bills, fermentation, distillation, barrel selection, and the characteristics that distinguish different whiskey profiles. He also has particular knowledge of high-rye and high-proof bourbons, which can be incorporated into specialized tastings based on guest interests.

Co-owner Mike Daley brings another perspective to the experience through his extensive personal collection of American, Scotch, and Irish whiskies. His interest in whiskey history, individual expressions, and distinctive bottles contributes to the company's approach to specialized tastings. For collectors and experienced bourbon drinkers, discussions may extend beyond familiar brands to explore the characteristics of particular barrels, production years, and limited releases. Both owners emphasize helping guests discover something new, whether that means learning more about a familiar distillery or finding a bourbon that suits their individual preferences.

Education remains an important part of the company's private tour offerings. Guests can learn how bourbon moves from grain to glass, including the roles of mash bills, fermentation, distillation, and barrel aging. Winter visits also provide an opportunity to discuss how seasonal temperature changes influence maturation inside traditional rickhouses. Temperature fluctuations affect the interaction between whiskey and the oak barrels during aging, contributing to the development of the flavors and aromas associated with different bourbons.

Top Tier Bourbon Tours works with individuals, private groups, and corporate clients seeking experiences tailored to their interests rather than fixed public itineraries. Tours can be arranged as single-day outings or expanded into multi-day programs, depending on the destinations and activities selected. The planning process considers preferred distilleries, tasting interests, available reservations, and group size. This flexibility allows guests to prioritize bourbon history, production methods, particular brands, or opportunities to sample distinctive expressions.

The winter evening format builds on the company's existing private transportation and tour coordination services while incorporating seasonal experiences suited to shorter daylight hours and colder weather. Availability depends on distillery operating schedules, site access, and guide availability, making advance reservations important for groups interested in participating.

Top Tier Bourbon Tours provides private bourbon excursions and transportation throughout the Louisville and surrounding Kentucky regions. Led by co-owners Jonathan French and Mike Daley, the company combines industry knowledge, whiskey expertise, and customized planning to create experiences for both newcomers and longtime enthusiasts. Its winter evening tours offer another opportunity to explore Kentucky bourbon through specialized tastings, distillery visits, and a closer look at the traditions behind the spirit.
