Tuscaloosa, Ala. ? A hot topic among society today lies within the structure of prisons. Because bail can be so difficult and expensive to obtain, many individuals believe that the system is unfair to those with low income. A bail bonding company in Tuscaloosa, AL is explaining the changes that COVID-19 has brought to the bail bonds industry.

With the pandemic at hand, the biggest concern regarding prisons is the threat of an outbreak among prisoners. Because of this, many prisoners who did not commit violent crimes have been allowed to leave jail without having to secure bail. This has been an issue for bail bondsman companies because they have seen a drop in the number of individuals who need bail. Many companies have gone out of business as a result.

While this change in the system has been difficult on the bail bonds industry, some experts say that this is the kick start that the prison system needed to get on the road to reform. For years, people have been discussing the unfairness of the bailout system. The changes that COVID-19 has brought upon the prison system are essentially the same changes that many people think should have been made anyway. Because it is so difficult for low-income individuals to secure bail, many have proposed that non-violent crimes should elicit a release from jail for either a very low bail price or a nonexistent bail price. Now that COVID-19 has brought upon this very change, experts predict that it will still stand after the threat of the virus vanishes.

Alabama Bail Bonds is aware of the shifting prison system and wants to keep the community informed as more changes occur. They are pleased to continue offering their service of 24 hour bail bonds in Tuscaloosa, AL, and help individuals navigate these unprecedented times when it comes to bailing out of jail.
