September 26, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Reginald Williams Realty, LLC in Mount Pleasant, South Carolina, has announced a new home value resource for those who are enlisting to sell their homes themselves. According to spokesperson from the real estate agent, home values and the housing market in general have continued to climb in Charleston through the third quarter of 2016.

"It's amazing that we've seen such growth in our area," says the agency spokesperson. "This growth has prompted many homeowners to take on the task of selling their homes as for sale by owner, which has a number of benefits, provided they know how to approach this sales technique."

The agency has stated that there are a number of things to consider when attempting to sell a home without the assistance of a real estate professional. Homeowners should first know the true value of their homes, in order to ensure that they receive the best possible price.

"If you're selling your home, this means that you will likely need money to buy another home," says the agency spokesperson. "If you list your home for far less than it is actually worth, you are damaging your chances of purchasing another, better home and in some cases, you may not get enough out of your sale to buy the home that you want."

The agency states that with the rise in the number of properties for sale and in overall home values over the years, they feel that consumers need assistance when determining the value of their properties. They state that they are offering assistance to those who want to sell their homes by owner, and can help them to learn the proper methods of ensuring that they are setting their selling price at a level that will do well in today's market and also give them the funds they need from the sale.

A number of consumers in all areas of the nation today are opting for the for sale by owner approach. Those interested in learning more about how to properly value their homes before they take this approach can visit Reginald Williams Realty, LLC on the agency's official website.
