Seattle WA: TopHoverboardReview and Jonathan Whitney are pleased to announce the release of their hoverboard review website and blog. The site is providing consumers with the safety information they need to consider before purchasing a hoverboard. Early in 2016, there was a massive recall of the first generation hoverboards which had a major negative impact on the marketplace. The recall was due to the lithium ion batteries used in the early models of self-balancing scooters, as they had a tendency to explode.

This highly dangerous characteristic caused a lot of uncertainty among consumers, even though new safety standards are now in place to correct consumers. The UL 2272 certification is one example. The purpose of the TopHoverboardReview website is to lead the push for consumer safety awareness. Detailed reviews of hoverboards are provided with a strong focus on design quality and safety protocols which are in place.

TopHoverboardReview offers the Hoverboard Safety Checker which is a tool to allow consumers to check the safety ranking of any make or model of a hoverboard. In addition to the detailed reviews which are provided on the website, a blog about all things related to hoverboards is available. The blog discusses the latest innovations in hoverboard technology and the safety features which are being implemented for the device.

The detailed reviews of the top models of hoverboards include information about characteristics such as top speed, wheel size, charge time, battery life, weight, weight capacity, UL 2272 certification, and rating. The top models which are review at present include the Swagtron, EPIKGO, Powerboard, Hoverzon XLS and Hovertrax 2.0. The consumer can compare prices for these models, as found on Amazon.com, as well as identifying information about discounts or coupons which may be available on selected models.

The site also includes a brief history of hoverboards for interesting reading. These features make this website the definitive authority for anyone seeking information about the topic of hoverboards.
