People dread the thought of a plumbing emergency and for good reason. Depending on which part of the plumbing system is affected, a house property may not just sustain water damage but also be contaminated with various toxic and hazardous materials. Miami Rooter, a company that offers services for plumbing Miami FL residents can depend on, was recently called out for such an emergency and is proud to report that they were able to resolve the emergency situation.

Scott Ward from Miami Rooter says: "We offer regular plumbing service, and also an emergency service. When we got a phone call from a frantic client saying that water was leaking into their home and they didn't know where from, we were on our way and on site in less than an hour."

Upon attending the property, Miami Rooter's employees quickly noted that the issue was black water, which means water from the toilets and sewage system had contaminated the home. They were, thankfully, able to contain the flood so that it only affected a small part of the home. They got to work fixing the issue and removing the contaminated water.

"In case of an emergency, we can be there very quickly, regardless of the time of day," continues Scott Ward. "We will immediately start to address the situation, diagnosing what has happened and repairing it straightaway. We're just happy the clients called us when they did, as the situation could have been much worse."

The above-mentioned clients are still recovering from the damage to their property and currently engaging in water remediation. Nevertheless, they feel that Miami Rooter is clearly one of the best plumbing companies Miami FL has to offer, something many agree with. Carlos R., for instance, says: "The technician for Miami Rooter came to my house promptly after calling them and installed my new kitchen sink in less than half an hour and even managed to share a few good jokes with me during the process. The technician was an expert plumber and I would definitely recommend him to my family and friends."
