April 15, 2019 -
San Jacinto Home Protection Pros is pleased to announce that they recently expanded their service area to help residents of San Jacinto and the Riverside County area with their home security and protection needs.

As noted on the company?s website, at https://sanjacintohomeprotectionpros.business.site, the continuous advancement in technology now enables homeowners to choose the best and most reliable security systems at affordable price tags. In fact, coinciding with the fact that home security systems are no longer as expensive as they once were, a recent study shows that 1 in 4 property owners are already in the process of buying and installing security systems. This is because many people now understand that having a home security system is truly a worthy investment.

Bobby Martin of San Jacinto Home Protection Pros explains that many people now opt to install their home security system on their own as a DIY project. ?While it is tempting to do so, you should bear in mind that home security systems start from as little as $10 but can easily increase with every item you add to the kit. This is precisely the reason why many specialists recommend sitting down with a professional to identify a household's needs before actually purchasing any home security system,? he says.

Martin also advises homeowners to avoid the cheap home security systems that can be bought from most electronic shops, hardware stores or home improvement shops. While they are relatively inexpensive, he points out that it is very important to go to established and trusted dealerships who primarily specialize in home security systems. ?If you don?t have the technical know-how and experience regarding wireless and wired home security systems, it is better to hire an expert who can professionally install the any cameras or alarm because they can provide you with reliable technical support and a comprehensive warranty policy,? he says.

San Jacinto Home Protection Pros issued a number of useful tips and guidelines to remember when hiring a home security company in this area: https://goo.gl/maps/mReC6JwHNjP2. Martin notes that, ?Home security systems not only protect your property from theft and damage, but also increase your home?s market value significantly. However, you shouldn't just be signing off agreements with home security monitoring companies so quickly.?

He explains that while competitors have flooded the market with hard-to-resist offers, the reality is that they often fail to implement these offers properly when it comes to installation or monitoring. This is because these companies often use sub-contractors, which can lead to varying levels of quality in terms of service?at which point customers are left with a third-party provider once the first company packs up.

Martin also warns customers to be wary of too-good-to-be-true offers since security systems vary a great deal depending on the types of devices that a homeowner wishes to install. He states that motion detectors and cameras (depending on the quantity to be installed), sirens, door or window contacts, control panels, and more can quickly add to the bill. In addition to this, the monthly monitoring expenses will also depend on the number of devices included in the overall package, which is why there is ?no one price fits all? when it comes to home security systems.

Furthermore, some companies trick people into signing an agreement that forever binds their customers. ?Know that you can buy devices from one company and obtain monitoring services from another. This way, you can switch home security monitoring companies if the one you currently subscribe to provide unsatisfactory services,? says Martin. He states that popular providers in the market like Caddx, DSC, or Ademco can be monitored by any other third party company.

Martin recommends that homeowners evaluate the individual price of each device and compare them to what a home security system company is offering. He states that in addition to the cost of the devices, property owners must also consider monitoring, maintenance, customer support, and warranty in their security budget. On this note, he also advises homeowners to watch out for unwanted add-ons as some companies may attempt to sneak them into a home security plan.

?Some home security monitoring companies also try other plans like fire tracking or medical tracking, which can be valuable to some people, but may not be useful with your current situation. Add-ons that are more useful include certification (used for insurance), extended warranty plans, and VIP priority when it comes to repair,? explains Martin.
