November 26, 2019 -

Tuscaloosa, AL ? Tuscaloosa Bail Bonds company, Alabama Bail Bonds, is highlighting how to become a bail bondsman this month. Since it?s the season for thankfulness, Alabama Bail Bonds is reflecting on how thankful they are for the bail bonds career and are sharing the certification process with everyone. Alabama Bail Bonds is grateful to be a helping hand to their community through bail bonds and wants to share with the community how they can become the same help too.

Alabama Bail Bonds shared that the first step in becoming a bail bondsman is by evaluating oneself and their qualifications. A bail bondsman must be 18 years old, and a resident of the state they wish to be a bail bondmen in. They detailed how bail bondsmen must also have no record of felony convictions or violating any provisions of bail bonds. Their financial status must be enough to support borrowers as well.

The bail bond agents in Tuscaloosa also shared that bail bondsmen must meet educational and training requirements. Before becoming a bail bondsman, a person must take a 20-hour bail bonds course before a licensing exam. They explained that many schools offer the course online or the prospective bail bondsmen can find a physical school to attend courses. The prospective bail bondsmen will learn about bail language, how to begin a bail company, fulfilling bail obligations, arrest and release procedures, and many other aspects of bail bonds.

The final step Alabama Bail Bonds shared with the community this month is to take the final exam. Known as the Alabama Insurance Producer exam, the bail bonds exam is fifty questions covering the entire educational course. Participants must score a 35 out of 50 to pass. If they pass, they can apply for a license. The license is good for two years and upon renewal, the bail bondsmen must take 24 credit hours of continuing education.
