Best Fishing Review, a blog that offers tips and guidance about fishing, is introducing free fishing classes to their online fans. The blog recently announced that they will be offering weekly tutorials about fishing to beginners to help supplement their fishing review articles.

"Most fishers find it difficult to find reliable information about fishing. Personally, I also struggled to find information that could help me kick start my fishing career, as most of the resources I found had little quality in them. However, we hope that by offering weekly classes, and supplementing the classes with our frequent articles about fishing, our readers will have more information to use," John Parker, the website owner says.

The blog's writers have spent the past few years educating hobbyists and professional fishers about equipment, tools and resources that could best improve fishing. With the introduction of free classes, therefore, these writers hope that beginner fishers will find proper mentorship and guidance as they venture into fishing. The optional classes will be offered through tutorials and emails mainly to beginners.

According to Simpson, who is also a writer at the blog, introducing classes is a major step forward for the blog. Simpson says that the information and fishing tips they will be offering will help bridge the gap between knowing how to use fishing equipment and how to actually catch fish. He also notes that there are many people who appreciate their review articles on the blog but still complain about not succeeding in their fishing endeavors. Simpson hopes that such fishers can also tap on the tips on bestfishingreview.com and know how to progress forward as fishers.

“Fishing is a skill that not everyone has. Even people who know a lot about fishing boats and equipment don’t always have a clue about how to best catch fish. Others who know the basics of fishing don’t always know why their careers seem to be stagnant, and that’s why we are keen to start the classes in the soonest time possible,” Simpson added.

In the meantime, however, bestfishingreview.com continues to offer insightful reviews about everything to do with fishing. The blog also guides fishers about the places and tips on how to buy different fishing equipment and tools. According to the blog owner, John Parker, his blog’s biggest priority is to inform and educate fishers through high quality articles and reviews, and they will continue to write anything that will be educative and relevant to their web visitors.
