Pickens County, Ala. ? Alabama Bail Bonds, a trusted jail release agent in Pickens County, is doing everything possible to help those in need as they work through challenges sprung forth by the pandemic. They are proud to see the community coming together to support one another in a myriad of ways, especially when it comes to jail release help. Alabama Bail Bonds wants to highlight a new bailout assistance organization, put together by two graduates of the University of Alabama.

This recently founded bailout assistance program is called Tuscaloosa Bailout. Having already raised around $7,000, the program is thriving and currently helping inmates in need. Their volunteers regularly visit the jails and give the inmates surveys and consent forms. This enables them to properly assess the inmates and decide which ones will receive the bailout donations.

The two University of Alabama graduates decided to create this assistance program because they have a passion for helping out their community, especially during these unprecedented times. With the coronavirus outbreak, individuals residing in jail cells are at high risk for catching the virus. The current cash bailout system makes it difficult for those with low income to receive release from jail because the cost of bail is so high. Tuscaloosa Bailout exists to combat these challenges. They are happy to accept donations through their online payment channel or via checks.

Alabama Bail Bonds understands the challenges that many low-income inmates face as they do their best to secure bail money, so it is a pleasure for them to see organizations like Tuscaloosa Bailout come into action. Alabama Bail Bonds seeks to help people get out of jail in Pickens County, AL, while making the process as smooth and efficient as possible.
