September 24, 2015 -
Lethbridge, Alberta based company Canadian Immigration Podcast has recently released a series of podcasts highlighting Express Entry. Express Entry is a new system that Canada uses to choose immigrants with skilled work experience and grant them permanent resident status.

The podcasts that was released by Mark Holthe of Canadian Immigration Podcast, outline this system and provide answers to questions that immigrants and Canadian citizens may have about the process. Three of the podcasts that focus on these answers are:

Express Entry ? Job Offers and CRS Process, the first podcast in the series, outlines how the Job Bank works within this system and how employers can connect with potential employees through the Job Bank. Also covered are tips for increasing ranking system score, and what potential candidates need in order to be drawn without an actual offer of employment.

In Express Entry ? Education and Work Experience, Holthe answers questions related to whether a business analyst is considered as a skilled job for Express Entry and how to determine if a specific position is considered skilled under the guidelines of the program.

The third podcast, Express Entry ? Language Testing, explains the minimum language score acceptable to be granted permanent resident status under Express Entry. It also provides resources that users can check to determine if their language score is sufficient to be accepted.

Holthe observes, "The internet is full of people offering information, and asking that people pay for that information. It is virtually impossible for an individual to determine which representative is best suited to help them."

The podcasts are designed to answer questions and help individuals to determine whether or not they qualify for Express Entry, as well as offer them resources to help them become qualified.

Holthe states that he freely offers information to those who need it. He adds, "I offer practical advice on the latest changes to Canadian law, policy and practice."

He states that he began Canadian Immigration Podcast with the intention of helping those who need answers, which is the reason behind the podcasts. His podcasts are all designed to answer the most common questions that potential immigrants ask when applying for Express Entry, and he provides answers to other immigration questions as well.
