Back To 30, a medical spa is offering Ultheraphy treatments in Upstate South Carolina serving Greenville, Spartanburg, Anderson, Simpsonville, and Boiling Springs. The clinic claims that is the largest provider of Ultherapy treatments in all the east coast states.

Ultherapy is an FDA-approved non-surgical treatment to lift and tighten the skin using ultrasound technology. It uses both ultrasound imaging and ultrasound energy. It can be used to treat loose skin under the neck and chin, lines or wrinkles on the chest, and general skin laxity. According to research published in Clinical, Cosmetic and Investigational Dermatology in 2015 found that every patient in the study was satisfied or very satisfied with their results 180 days after treatment.

Ultherapy can be used to view and target specific layers of a patient?s skin tissues to ensure better results. Ultrasound therapy can also stimulate collagen production, which can result in a gradual tightening and lifting of the skin over time, reducing lines, wrinkles, and loose skin. However, in a disclaimer, the spa says, though there is no guarantee of specific results as individual results may vary. Ultherapy can treat the face, neck, eyebrows, and chest. For some patients, it may also be used on the stomach, knees, and other areas.

Typical candidates for this treatment are patients in their 30s or older who have begun to experience signs of aging or loose skin. Ultherapy can be an ideal alternative to surgical options for patients who are not ready, unwilling, or unable to undergo surgery. Since Ultherapy treatment relies on stimulating collagen, it is not generally recommended for patients with excess fat under their skin.

During the treatment, the first step is preparing the treatment area. The selected patch of skin will be cleansed prior to treatment and an ultrasound gel will be applied to ease movement for the Ultherapy device. Then the handheld ultrasound instrument will be applied to the treatment area, and a highly trained medical practitioner will use ultrasound imaging to ensure the specified tissues are targeted. There is no downtime as patients can return to work and their regular daily activities immediately following the treatment session.
