It is very important to be able to be aware of body temperature, particularly if someone is very young, elderly, ill, or infirm. However, many current devices do not give fast, accurate, or consistent results. For iProven, this simply wasn't good enough, which is why they have released their dual function forehead and ear thermometer, now with an upgraded algorithm for further accuracy. They are proud to announce that they have received numerous positive reviews for this thermometer.

iProven's Daniel Noordijk says: "Our goal is to make sure that people are able to take the temperature of anyone they care about and be sure that what they are seeing is correct. This then enables them to make the necessary changes to better help their loved ones regulate their temperature, or even to seek medical assistance when it is needed. We're really happy to see that our clients are appreciating our technology."

The smart thermometer is being hailed for its ease of use and accuracy. People are also very happy about the fact that it can be used without disturbing the patient. This is particularly important with babies, who need their sleep in order to achieve proper growth, development and heal faster. The thermometer has received in excess of 120 reviews and currently ranks as a 4.7 star rated item on Amazon, making it one of the best selling items in its class.

"This is a good ear thermometer. It lets you know right away if your temp is elevated with a red light / green light feature as well as different sounds. The reading is almost instant. My husband and daughter always measure easily and consistently, but I must have weird ears. There are instructions for positioning the thermometer for an accurate reading and it works great for me...," says an Amazon customer.

Daniel Noordijk, meanwhile, encourages people who are considering the thermometer to read the reviews, including the more critical ones. He ends: "We appreciate everything our customers share with us, good or bad, as this helps us to identify what we do well and where we can do better. Not just that, it ensures that other people know exactly what they can expect from our products."
