Lisa Amundson wants couples who are divorcing to realize that even in an emotionally charged situation, it is vital to have an attorney who can focus on securing their future and undertakes a sound strategy for legal decision-making. The divorce process will have a number of steps. The first step is, of course, the filing of the divorce, which involves the sending or receiving of the paperwork needed to petition the court for a divorce. The next step is the filing for temporary custody and/or support, which provides some structure while going through divorce process. The third step is the discovery process, which provides both parties with equal access to the various documents for the retirement accounts, home financing, and other important financial information.

The fourth step has to with issues regarding custody and finances. This is where many divorcing couples come into conflict. Attorney Lisa Amundson, as Eagan MN divorce attorney, will ensure that her client?s rights are protected during the process and will strive to get the best possible outcome. The fifth step is the negotiation process. Here, the divorce lawyer will use her experience and deep understanding of the law to know when to keep fighting and when to stop fighting and accept a compromise.

The sixth step is to go to trial or to reach a settlement. After both parties have settled on all key issues, it would be time to submit the agreement for approval to the family law court. However, if both parties failed to reach a settlement, they will need to go to trial.
