March 19, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Frisco-based mBrace Orthodontics always tries to keep their patients informed about dental trends and dental-related conditions by posting informational blogs on their website. Their latest blog covers when someone should start to be concerned about their jaw pain. This is a subject that is very relevant to dentistry because many conditions that result in jaw pain stem from problems with teeth. This Frisco, TX dental practice is committed to keeping their patients better informed about current dental happenings as part of their excellent customer service. It?s what those at mBrace Frisco Orthodontics feel sets them apart from other area dental offices.

Dr. Shireen Irani, mBrace Frisco Orthodontics founder, says, ?As a dentist, I have learned all about the many sources of jaw pain but I feel many of my patients are surprised when I tell them a tooth-related problem may be the source of their jaw pain. If this is the case, then that is something that I can attempt to correct. There is no reason for most people to have to live with jaw pain and its sometimes-debilitating effects. When jaw pain should be a concern is something that I feel everyone needs to be made aware of. That?s why I felt compelled to post this new blog at this particular time.?

The new article that was just posted started by mentioning that jaw pain includes any physical irritation that occurs in the jaw area. It is also more common than people think. The new post also stated that while it?s very unusual for someone to have to seek emergency treatment for jaw pain, it can be a sign of a more severe underlying condition. It then went on to point out such causes of jaw pain as physical trauma, TMJ (Temporomandibular Joint) disorder, injured nerve endings, and underlying dental conditions. Other causes of jaw pain that were also brought up in the article include sinus problems, cluster & tension headaches, and Myocardial Infarction (Heart Attack). The new blog post also talked about how a person should be concerned when their jaw pain impairs their ability to talk and eat, or the pain is escalating over time. When jaw pain is accompanied by popping sounds, ear pain, face swelling, tinnitus, headaches, and dizziness, it also should be a concern that gets checked by a doctor.

Dr. Irani also talked about the many different dental services that they do at their practice. Many of them center around the straightening of a patient?s teeth to enhance their smile. This includes their highly popular Invisalign Braces which attract less attention to a wearer's mouth. They offer braces for both children and adults and also feature ceramic braces and other two-phase treatments.

Whether this orthodontist practice is treating adults or children, the high praises that come their way in the form of reviews are always the same. Chris A stated, ?I just started Invisalign with Dr. Shireen and am very happy I did. What stands out most to me as an older patient is the genuineness and authenticity of Dr. Shireen and her staff. Of course, these traits describe her both personally and professionally, so she hires and trains her staff with that in mind. There are loads of technically qualified people to work in her field, so what will set her practice apart is creating a culture and office atmosphere that is not robotic and cold, but truly friendly and welcoming without any tension between staff and patient. So glad I found this gem.? Ruby D wrote, ?Extremely nice staff and Doctor. My 11-year-old felt very comfortable. Everyone seems genuinely caring. Explained and showed us what?s going on with her teeth for us to actually understand and answered all the questions we had. I really liked that we were not rushed during the consultation. No sales pitches and did not put any pressure on us. Really liked the atmosphere. We felt very welcome there. My daughter is actually excited to get her expander and braces there.? These reviews were taken from mBrace Frisco Orthodontics Google Maps Business Listing where they have an unusually high 5 out of 5-star rating on over 200 reviews.
