Chimneys come with a lot of benefits, especially for people who use their fireplaces and use wood. This is because they make sure that there are no poisonous gases in the house by providing a system that eliminates smoke. A chimney needs regular checks especially if it is used often. This is to make sure that it is not blocked or there is no buildup that can be risky.

Chicagoland Fireplace and Chimney Restoration has highlighted the risks related to a chimney that is not swept. According to the company website, ?Another major hazard related to an unclean chimney is carbon monoxide poisoning. Numerous cases of carbon monoxide poisoning are reported every year. In fact, thousands of cases go unreported. Carbon monoxide can cause sickness and in some cases, it may even be fatal. Heating appliances are major contributors to the increasing number of carbon monoxide cases. In order to prevent various problems related to carbon monoxide and creosote buildup, you should get the chimney cleaned at least once every year. It is important to understand that chimney cleaning is a complicated and time-consuming task. An average homeowner does not have the time, energy, and experience to properly clean a chimney.?

The company recommends a professional Chimney Sweep occasionally to reduce the risks of fire.
