The process typically begins with filing a notice of claim and then collecting evidence to support the claim. This includes medical records, witness statements, accident reports, and any other relevant documents. After this, the lawyer will draft and then submit a complaint in court on behalf of the client. This will provide the details as why the client has grounds for filing a wrongful death case. Finally, the lawyer will negotiate with the lawyers of the other party or take the case to trial if needed.
