Midway Dog Academy is pleased to announce that they have begun offering training services for dogs in Addison, Illinois. Since their 2007 founding in Chicago, the academy has expanded from coast to coast, helping dogs and their owners all over the country.

Now, they have set their goals on serving the Addison community. Megan Wallace, a representative of the company, noted, "In this new location, we seek to help dog-owners with the diverse behavior issues we address in our other locations. We rely on an exclusive network of dog trainers and pet professionals that we have partnered with, which helps us connect busy dog owners with the perfect dog professional to help them address all of their dog's needs. We are able to ensure positive results thanks to our trainers, who have worked with thousands of dogs and puppies and have accumulated over 30+ years of training experience."

As the company explains, some of the most common behavior problems that dogs show are sociability issues. These can include barking at strangers, jumping on people, running away, or generally aggressive behavior. These are all problems that could be addressed by an experienced dog trainer?the academy states that any dog can be trained regardless of age, breed, and behavior if taken to the adequate professional.

The local dog training academy uses unique techniques to educate the dog's natural pack member instinct to create a healthier, happier, more balanced animal. As the specialists state, this training program is one of the best ways to help dogs learn how to properly socialize with other canines, as well as persons. This makes for a happier, healthier, and calm animal.

Furthermore, the improvement in behaviour greatly contributes to a dog's quality of life as it diminishes their stress and anxiety. "A calm and collected animal is not only more pleasant to have around, but it is also safer. Stress can bring the worst out of our beloved pets, so it is of the utmost importance that we raise our dogs knowing how to behave around other animals and strangers," says Wallace. She adds that, while it is in a dog's nature to be sociable, one must encourage and develop this character.

Midway Dog Academy maintains that there are other behavior problems that are far more serious. These problems include biting, running away, chasing vehicles, or being overly territorial. These could put the dog and other's safety at risk, creating a serious threat that could be triggered under any stressful situation. Wallace explains, "While a dog's behavior can be unpredictable when they are under pressure, this does not mean there is no way to avoid these situations and train our dogs how to better deal with them."

Training dogs with these issues, along with other aspects of education and training, are Midway Dog Academy's specialty. They offer a complete selection of training services and programs designed to meet each dog's needs. Their services include dog socialization training, daycare, recovery or rehabilitation, puppy preschool, puppy potty camp, and other programs designed to improve a dog's quality of life. The local academy ensures the best results through a wide range of class sizes, varying from private lessons to small groups.

Midway Dog Academy is a trusted company throughout all of their locations, and they affirm that they go above and beyond to ensure the happiness of both the client and their pet. "We care for each of the dogs in our care, so we strive towards providing a clean environment and a stress-free atmosphere where they can relax and be at ease," states Wallace. "Before accepting any dogs into our care, they will get a free assessment from one of our skilled dog behavior professionals, where we will determine their behavior issues, and elaborate a plan along with the owner to train the dog in these specific problems, ensuring we treat their dog according to their needs."

The Midway Dog Academy has invited dog owners in the Addison area to consider training their pets, as this is a great way to improve their quality of life, as well as the owner's.
