London ? As an entrepreneur it can be hard to find a local networking group that really generates revenue for the new business. It is often difficult to properly evaluate a new group, and that is where BNi London (www.bnilondon.co.uk) can help. The independent site prides itself on being an impartial web portal for information on the wide range of different London networking groups that spring up from time to time. The site has announced the release of an important article giving tips on best practice when visiting any new networking event. Entitled 'Joining Networking Events in London? 3 Tips to Build Strong Relations', the article offers some great tips for how first-timers can get the most out of London networking events.

Anxiety is one thing to look out for as many feel nervous attending a busy group full of professional people. The article lists some tips on how to overcome this in a way that puts the socially awkward networker in a more positive mind-set for the event. Another common error is try to get too many contacts at once, not concentrating on the quality of those contacts. The article explores both of these issues items in depth, explaining why they happen and offering good advice on how to overcome the problems.

For those seeking the most cost effective way to grow a new business then network events are considered one of the way to accomplish this goal. The BNI London website was designed to provide a central library of resources for any business within London interested in learning more about networking events within the capital. The website is wholly maintained by BNI members, not the BNI organization itself. Therefore, visitors are offered a more impartial opinion and information.
