

Local Rehab Launches Better Website for Patients

November 22, 2024

November 22, 2024 -
Recovery Center for the Arts, located in Scottsdale, Arizona, has recently updated their website to provide patients with a more accessible resource for their recovery. Their new website has a sleeker design with easy-to-navigate menus. They?re continuing to add additional resources and information pages so readers can have a thorough understanding of what services they offer.

With splashes of color and photos highlighting a variety of creative endeavors, Recovery Center for the Arts? new website highlights their mission philosophy well. ?The mission of Recovery Center for the Arts is to provide a structured, nurturing, and creative environment for individuals seeking recovery from substance use disorders.?

Visitors to the website can find a variety of information readily at their fingertips. The website offers pages highlighting their treatment programs, from specific substance use programs to their supportive housing and mental health services. ?Our purpose is to offer a comprehensive and holistic approach to recovery by integrating evidence-based therapies with creative outlets.?

?Recovery Center for the Arts (RCFTA) operates two facilities to cater to different needs: one provides supportive residential housing, while the other offers Partial Hospitalization Program (PHP), Intensive Outpatient Program (IOP), and other outpatient services.? Their website explains. ?Our aim is to ensure seamless access to treatment post-rehabilitation. RCFTA remains committed to providing ongoing support during and after the treatment process.?

As a facility dedicated to the arts and helping patients heal their inner child, they know how important having a seamless website can be for the recovery process. For many, the first step towards healing is the hardest, so ensuring their website isn?t a barrier to entry is key to getting visitors the help they need when they need it.

The team at Recovery Center for the Arts is full of licensed mental health therapists, healing arts instructors, and trained professional addiction support staff. They have a variety of offerings, from a recording studio to photography, art, and more. No matter a patient?s personal needs, the staff encourages them to find a combination that works for them, as opposed to offering a single path for everyone to walk. ?We believe in the power of self-expression and self-discovery through art and creativity. Our program is designed to empower individuals to rediscover their inner strengths and find recovery through creativity.?

?Our dedicated and compassionate team specializes in dual diagnosis and can treat many mental health conditions such as depression, anxiety, mood disorders, and personality disorders.? Their website informs visitors. ?Recovery Centers for the Arts believes in treating both mental health and addiction simultaneously to provide ease of access to treatment.?

Those who wish to learn more about Recovery Center for the Arts and what their treatment programs entail can learn more at their website. They?re continuing to keep the information available up-to-date so incoming people can make informed decisions about their healing journey.

Built on the foundation of the healing power of creativity, Recovery Center for the Arts is dedicated to helping those living with mental health conditions and substance use disorders to find their voice. They offer more than just a 12-step program, encouraging those in treatment to try different options to find what fits best for themselves. They?re committed to supporting the journey of healing, recovery, and self-discovery for all. To get started, readers can visit their website to learn more or give them a call at (602) 579-9023.
