Greenville SC based Hook Security, a channel-only cybersecurity training firm, has announced that they are now looking for several new team members to join their fast-growing startup at their main headquarters. These new position openings range from channel champions to training experts. Read more about these new career opportunities here: HookSecurity.co.

Hook Security was founded in 2018 with the goal of helping people avoid being "hooked" by cyber predators. Now, a year after their founding, the company is ready to expand their reach and seize new territories. They are looking for remarkable individuals to cover some critical openings that prevent the company from reaching these goals. These openings present an opportunity for interested parties to join a promising company in their earliest stages, contributing to their growth first-hand while developing their own skills under the guidance of the company's capable and experienced leadership.

Parker Byrd, a spokesperson for Hook Security, states, "We are looking for highly talented individuals who are always willing to learn, adapt to new situations, and are strongly motivated to develop their abilities further. Together, we will help each other grow and shape the future of cybersecurity awareness training. If this resonates with you and your long-term goals, we invite you to reach out to us and apply for any of our openings. If everything pans out, we expect to welcome you into our team quite soon."

The first job opening at Hook Security is for a Channel Sales Manager. The responsibilities for this position include planning, creating, and setting in motion a partner program; achieving sales through new partnerships; improving profitability and identifying troubled areas; and determining objectives alongside a clear strategy to recruit new partners.

Hook Security is also looking for a Recruitment Specialist. The ideal candidate should be able to identify raw potential and assess a person's capabilities during an interview, screening the most prominent candidates who could bring value to the company. This person shall undertake all hiring activities for the company, from creating a job description for open roles, advertising openings, interviewing candidates, and eventually hiring the most capable and promising candidates.

Next, the company is in need of a Client Success Manager. This individual will create and nurture long-term relationships with clients. They should also compile information about the satisfaction of the company's clients and report these findings to the pertinent team, ensuring any concerns are improved upon as soon as possible.

Last but not least, Hook Security requires a Cybersecurity Training Director. This opening is among the most crucial for the company's development, as its responsibilities include designing and overseeing all learning and development programs at Hook Security for its partners, their clients, and the general marketplace. The Cybersecurity Training Director will also ensure that all of these programs stand up to the company's high standards of quality.

Hook Security offers several benefits to their employees, including Health Care Plans for Medical, Dental & Vision Care, Basic, Voluntary, and AD&D Life Insurance, Paid Time Off (Vacations, Sick & Public Holidays), Family Leave (Maternity, Paternity), Short Term & Long Term Disability, Work From Home Options, Wellness Resources, and Stock Option Plans. Interested applicants should apply online here: hooksecurity.co/careers.

Hook Security provides full-service phishing training and security awareness training, and they are dedicated to selling through channel partners. Hook Security maintains that cybersecurity is too important to not take seriously, and this belief is what prompted them to develop their proprietary 'edutainment' training system. They coach and entertain entire companies to recognize and respond to phishing attacks by building cybersecurity awareness.
