Costa Mesa, California based The Soliman Firm recently published a blog post on their website discussing how truck accidents differ from other types of vehicular accidents. The firm states that, while it might seem logical to think that they are similar, there are many factors involved in truck accidents that make them much more complicated to deal with.

As noted in the article, damages caused by truck accidents can be far more devastating than those from a car accident. In addition to severe injuries and extensive damage, trucking companies and insurance providers can make it very difficult for victims to claim the compensation they deserve. The firm's managing attorney, Steven Soliman, explains that, due to the truck's weight, truck collisions generally result in more severe damage and physical injuries. Such accidents can also lead to severe physical and emotional trauma, long recovery time and extremely high medical bills. Soliman points out that it is important to bear in mind that trucking companies, by law, are required to secure higher levels of insurance, so it is imperative that victims hire an experienced personal injury lawyer in order to maximise their compensation.

Meanwhile, as noted on The Soliman Firm's website, the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration (FMCSA) has set out a strict set of rules and regulations that is designed to keep truck drivers and the general motoring public safe on the road. For instance, FMCSA requires that trucking companies must have at least $750,000 in insurance on each truck that they own, and those who fail to meet the requirements are prohibited from operating on the roads. Next, truck operators must keep detailed inspections and maintenance records to ensure that their trucks are not only in good condition but also operating as they should be. When a truck accident occurs, a victim's lawyer can also demand these documents from the trucking company to be used as evidence in court.

Finally, FMCSA requires truck drivers to adhere to specific safety guidelines such as attending regular safety training programs and refresher courses. They are also required to keep a log of their driving hours to ensure that they do not exceed the maximum limit defined by the law.

Soliman states that dealing with the aftermath of a truck accident is a long and complicated process and only a professional truck accident attorney can protect a victim's interests. It is not uncommon for truck companies and their insurers to try to offer a settlement that is far below the true value of the claim. While it is tempting to accept such offers, Soliman recommends seeking help from a qualified legal representative who knows how to identify whether the settlement offered is fair or not.

The Soliman Firm is a full-service law firm that specializes in personal injury and employment litigation. They leverage their years of experience in handling such cases to ensure that each client receives the full compensation they are entitled to.

"I think every personal injury attorney's job is to win cases and get their clients the best possible result, but we do that without sacrificing the focus on their emotional needs. When I sign a case, that client becomes like family. We leave no stone unturned until we get the best result we can possibly get for you," Soliman says. He points out that the firm's mission is to provide their clients with honest and aggressive representation during such difficult times. "When someone picks up the phone and calls me, it is usually their very last resort. I make it my personal mission to leave them in a better place than when we found each other," he concludes. The Soliman Firm is home to one of the best personal injury lawyers in California, with millions of dollars won on behalf of clients in both personal injury and employment cases.

Lori P., in a glowing Yelp review, says, "Steve Soliman has gone above and beyond for me. I have yet to see the response from the other party, but the fact that he has taken steps to right the wrong doing on behalf of my previous employer has lifted a huge weight off my shoulders. I am so grateful to have someone so knowledgeable of the law on my side. I was getting nowhere trying to fight my employer on my own. Mr. Soliman has restored my faith that there are still good people in this world."
