SMM Group, LLC in Las Vegas, Nevada, recently released their oven mitts, which have since taken the Amazon marketplace by storm. With more than 1,400 reviews, and most of them five stars, the oven mitts are currently the hottest selling kitchen item in the marketplace, and reviews continue to trickle in from satisfied customers.

"We have designed our gloves so that they look and feel just like regular gloves, says company spokesperson, Mike. "They allow maximum flexibility, while completely protecting your hands from heat when grilling."

The oven mitts are constructed of Aramid fibers, the same material used in firefighter uniforms. The insides of the gloves are 100 percent soft cotton, for comfort, and they are designed to be lightweight and comfortable to wear, without causing stiffness. They are fully EN407 certified.

The mitts cover up to the wrists for maximum protection, and can be used as regular kitchen oven mitts as well. The palms include silicone strips to ensure against slipping and to provide optimal grip. The Aramid fibers allow users to hold hot pots and pans for longer periods of time, and remain completely protected from burns. The materials are also flame retardant, offering even more protection for the wearer.

Reviews from Amazon have been high. One customer claims that, "After two hours at about 400 degrees, I picked up a very hot cast iron skillet expecting to feel some heat through the gloves but I felt nothing. These gloves are the best."

Customers are finding them more than useful for grilling as well as for general use in the kitchen, and to tend fireplaces and wood stoves without worries of being burned when working with live flames. The materials protect the wearer from heat and burns up to 932 degrees, while still allowing for full movement and dexterity due to the lightweight design.

SMM Group, LLC offers a full replacement guarantee for the lifetime of the gloves. "We know that they're just that good," states Mike.
