February 18, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Phoenix AC and Heating Experts is pleased to announce that it is now providing both residential and commercial air conditioning services in the Anthem AZ and surrounding areas.

Heating, ventilation, and air conditioning, more commonly abbreviated to HVAC, is a system that everyone is familiar with. The system is a part of everyday life. Unfortunately, it is a fact of life that the majority of homeowners and business owners do not give much thought to their heating and air conditioning systems until something goes wrong. As many owners have found out to their cost, neglecting to service their systems can result in very expensive repairs. Many of these expensive repairs caused by breakdowns can in fact be prevented if regular professional maintenance is carried out.

The air conditioning services Anthem AC & Heating Experts in Anthem provide includes a long list of steps that they take in the maintenance process. They will measure the coolant level in the unit, cleaning any condenser coils, calibrate the thermostat to check proper operation, and inspect electrical connections to ensure safe operation, among other items.

The Phoenix AC & Heating Experts in Anthem also offer a wide range of other services which include professional maintenance of HVAC equipment for both residential and commercial customers. From duct cleaning to air quality testing, Phoenix AC and Heating Experts can advise and perform the work that is needed. They also offer emergency service, 24 hours a day, because they know how important air conditioning and/or heating is to a home or business.

They also offer installation of new heat pumps or heating units. They can assist homeowners in evaluating the size and type of heating or air conditioning that is needed and the choices that are available. Phoenix Air even has the capacity to provide climate control for server farms and other high-value electrical equipment.

Unlike many other providers of AC and Heating equipment, Phoenix makes a point to not just focus on one brand or type of unit. They make a point to be familiar with existing and older types of installation so that when something goes wrong, or when a system needs an upgrade, its technicians know exactly what to do and how to do it.

Another aspect to consider when there is an issue with an HVAC system is whether refrigerant will need to be part of the repair. If that is the case, then it will almost certainly mean that the HVAC system will need to be replaced.

The reason is simply that from January 1, 2020 it will no longer be legal to produce R22 refrigerant, sometimes referred to as freon. In addition, it will no longer be legal for American companies to import it. What this means, is that any older system that uses R22 will need to be replaced by a system that uses the more modern and safer R-410A which does not impact the ozone layer as R22 does.

Linda Adams, a spokesperson for Phoenix AC & Heating Experts said, "Because of the changes in regulations governing R22 refrigerants more and more customers are going to find that there will be a need to replace their HVAC system with one that can use the safer R-410. Whether it is just a low level of refrigerant that needs topping up or a repair that would need a complete refill, the R22 will simply not be available. We will obviously advise customers accordingly and we do have rebates and specials running on these replacements. We have specialists on staff that can help any business or homeowner make informed decisions about the transitions that they need to make."
