April 15, 2015 -
(West Palm Beach, FL) -- Steven Stinson has announced a new service through his company Stinson Insurance Consulting & Education LLC. He offers an Insurance Expert Witness service in insurance-related civil court cases. This service is likely to prove vital in various insurance cases.

"My credentials speak for themselves," says Steven A. Stinson, J.D., LL.M., C.P.C.U., C.L.U., A.I.C., A.A.I. "Thanks to my background, education and experience, I am particularly suited to provide my clients with pertinent advice, as well as compelling testimony."

Stinson will provide his service in civil court cases that relate to insurance. He is a qualified attorney himself, yet is frequently hired by other attorneys as an Insurance Expert Witness. This means that he can provide expert insight in insurance matters. Stinson is based in the south of Florida, but he is available to travel across the country to provide insurance testimony and advice.

To demonstrate to others how he can help in these matters, he also offers free consultation. This will give attorneys an opportunity to explore how his expertise can help in their cases and sway the eventual outcome in their favor. Expert advice can be vitally important in these types of cases, for both parties involved in the claim.

"Besides providing clients with a free consultation and with expert witness testimony," adds Steven Stinson, "I also provide consultancy in various areas of the law, hold presentations on areas in which I have experience and knowledge and release publications on areas relating to insurance."

The laws on expert witness testimony are clearly defined. They can be asked to appear in court in order to present an opinion on matters where they have proven qualifications. Additionally, they must present sufficient data and facts to support their opinion and they have to use reliable principles and methods to demonstrate the accuracy of their thoughts. Finally, experts must be able to demonstrate that they have applied their methods and principles in a reliable way to the facts pertaining to the case in which they work. Information on how Stinson is able to achieve this is available through his website, where clients can also book their consultation or his services.

Through his publications alone, Stinson immediately demonstrates how he meets the legal requirements of being an expert witness for insurance-related court cases. He understands all elements of insurance and how these apply to insurance providers, policy holders and those who make a claim against an insurance holder. In civil court, these types of cases can often settle for incredibly high amounts, particularly if expert advice is provided for the claimant. Alternatively, this testimony can help keep the bill down for the insurance provider, if applicable.
