Discover Accounting, a premier educational information provider, has just released its Top 101 Most Affordable Accounting Schools.

The education service organization, Discover Accounting, reports the release of its 101 Most Affordable Accounting Colleges list. This list is based on various data types that go above and beyond choosing a college or degree based solely on its cost in dollars. The information used to create this list includes acceptance rates, online reviews, graduation rates, average salaries for graduates, available online programs, retention rates, and, of course, the monetary cost of the education provided.

The complete list of the 101 Most Affordable Accounting Programs can be found on Discover Accounting. Here, students can also discover information about expected earnings, employment options and the growth outlook for many specialized accounting career fields.

On this particular list, CUNY Bernard M Baruch College, CUNY Brooklyn College, University of Texas Rio Grande Valley, CUNY Hunter College, California State University (Los Angeles) and Texas Southmost College were among some of the colleges that were on the top 101 most affordable accounting colleges in the U.S.

About the Top 100 List

Discover Accounting created its list of the top 100 affordable accounting programs with a proprietary ranking system, paying special attention to colleges that offered many different affordable degree programs. They also took into account where the colleges were located. After all, if a student is looking for an affordable school, they probably don't want to move all the way across the country to get there. Either way, while the company provides information on some of the most affordable schools for future accountants, it also recognizes that students must make the best choice for them. That may mean choosing a school with a social scene, making sure graduates of the chosen school are able to find a job right away, or it really may just boil down to the closest school that can give students the degree they need for the least monetary investment. Whatever students are looking for, Discover Accounting is proud to provide the information needed to help those students choose the perfect school for their unique needs.
