May 11, 2020 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Newbury Park, CA based Rubber Chicken Cards is delighted to announce that they have come up with a safer and more practical alternative for those who wish to send personalized, handwritten paper greeting cards to their friends and family. With the danger of infection looming over conventional greeting cards due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the company is pleased to inform their safety conscious customers that they now offer the option to have such greeting cards created and sent from the Rubber Chicken website, virtually eliminating any risk. Learn more about the company, their products, services and history at the following link: www.rubberchickencards.com.

The company states, "Rubber Chicken Cards is offering our customers a new way to reach out to their loved ones without putting anyone at risk. Those who check out our website will quickly learn that the system is quite easy to grasp. You choose the card you want to send, write a personal message in the handwritten font of your choice and we do the rest. We print, stamp and send your paper greeting card in the US Mail for you. You never have to leave the house or office, and your personalized paper greeting card will arrive at the home of your friend or family member." Notably, customers may utilize the website's ecards feature if they wish to send an entirely digital card instead.

Rubber Chicken Cards has specialized in the development of creative and charming greeting cards (that are written and illustrated by a host of talented individuals) since their founding in June of 2000. Their mission is to give people the opportunity to form connections in a more quirky manner that does not require either the real-time investment of modern technology or even the length of a full letter. A greeting card from Rubber Chicken Cards is meant to be the spark that keeps a relationship alive. In some cases, the company believes it can even be the spark that ignites one.

This perspective is one reason that they are glad they can continue to help their customers reach out to loved ones in this way. "To send a traditional paper greeting card, using our website, a person never has to leave the house. There is literally no point of contact," observes Steven Rotblatt, Artist and CEO at Rubber Chicken Cards. Rotblatt is also an award-winning animator and illustrator who has previously contributed to projects such as A Kid's Guide to the Smithsonian Museum and A Brief History of Time. Rubber Chicken Cards' staff of artists, animators, voice over actors and so on boast similarly high accolades in the creative industries. Above all, however, they share a passion for creating greeting cards that cater to a wide variety of individual tastes while communicating universal themes of love, acceptance and harmony.

The company states, "Our amazing artists, many of whom are celebrities, have stepped up to the plate to deliver some remarkable and unique cards that you won't find anywhere else. Cards arrive in your friend's US Postal Mail with custom handwritten text that looks just like you wrote it yourself. Rubber Chicken Cards offers hundreds of cards that run the gamut from Corona Virus, Get Well, I love You, Humor, Birthday, Thank You and the full range of holidays and events. Many of the cards are humorous but there are always more serious and sweeter cards that folks can send to anyone. Folks are staying home, going outside as little as possible and stepping out to the stores only for essentials. We offer a great way to send a real paper greeting card by US Postal Mail without ever leaving your house."

The safety and well being of their customers is of paramount importance to Rubber Chicken Cards. As such, they hope that this new option will allow more people to express their affection for each other. The company suggests, for instance, that this can be a great way for young children to stay in touch with their grandparents.

More information can be found on the company's official website and other online resources. Customers are encouraged to visit the online platform and browse Rubber Chicken Cards' large assortment of greeting cards that can now have a personalized, "handwritten" message shared inside. Interested parties are also welcome to reach out to Steven Rotblatt in order to follow up on any further inquiries.
