February 02, 2021 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Permakill Exterminating Co. LLC, a pest control company in New Jersey, is offering rodent control services. The company says that keeping the rodent population in check is important since they are known to carry and spread diseases that can be fatal.

Mice breed at an extremely fast rate. An adult female can give birth to up to 50 pups a year. This can lead to exponential growth that can become very hard to control. They carry viruses and bacteria that can contaminate food storage leading to diseases such as allergic reactions and food poisoning. They can drop fecal matter at a rate of almost 70 pellets per day. Humans can contract diseases if they touch alive or dead mice, or come in contact with their feces, urine, or saliva. A rodent bite is also known to transmit diseases.

The Hantavirus is carried by several rodent species such as the deer mice. The virus is transmitted to humans when fresh rodent excretions become airborne and are breathed by people. Once infected, there is a chance that the condition can progress to Hantavirus Pulmonary Syndrome (HPS), a severe respiratory disease that is known to be fatal.

Lymphocytic choriomeningitis is caused by the common house mice. It can occur after exposure to fresh urine, droppings, or saliva from infected rodents. The symptoms can be flu-like such as fever, malaise, muscle aches, headaches, and nausea. There is also a chance for the disease to manifest neurological symptoms if the infection is severe.

Tularemia is caused by the bacterium Francisella Tularensis. Humans can get infected by contact with rodents, tick, and deer fly bites, consuming contaminated water, and others. The symptoms vary based on how the bacteria enter the body. Common symptoms can be a really high fever.

The plague is known for its role in history. Plague bacteria are transmitted by the bite of an infected flea. Those infected with the bubonic plague face the onset of fever, headaches, chills, weakness, and swellings all over the body. The disease is treatable but requires prompt treatment with antibiotics or else it can be fatal.

Rodents are also much more than carriers of diseases. They can also cause irreparable structural damage to property. By some estimates, at least 20% of undetermined house fires in the United States were due to electrical wire damage caused by pest infestations.

Permakill has an average review score of 4.9 out of 5 from over 10 reviews on its GMB listing. A particular review says, "Got 'em !! We had some unwelcome visitors then heard a ruckus in the walls. Sure enough, the PermaKill team came immediately, knew, conquered, and now the uninvited Carpenter Nest is Perma-gone. No sign of leftovers or returning pests. The team was so gracious and skillful. Many thanks for the peace of mind and returned sense of comfort."

Permakill has a simple 3 step process for ridding its customer's property of rodent infestations. The first step is when a customer calls them or schedules an appointment from its website. The company asks for as many details as possible before visiting the property for the next step. Then the company's exterminators arrive at the property and evaluate the situation. They divulge their findings to the client and plan out a solution to tackle the infestation. Next, if the customer agrees, rat and mice control is started. The technicians can even start on the same day as the inspection. The professionals follow all the industry-standard processes to remove the rodent problem without damaging the house or the health of the people living in it. The process is quick and thorough. The exterminators will then provide aftercare tips to the residents. They can even schedule follow-up inspections or removals to treat the area again if necessary.

The company can be reached at its phone number at (973) 584-6414 or at its email id at info@permakillexterminating.com. Customers can also follow the company on its Facebook page for regular updates.
