Summer is here and property owners are searching for competent tree service providers to care for their beautiful trees. Syracuse Tree Service Experts, with their certified arborist lead tree service teams, is available to help property owners maintain their valuable curb appeal.

Stressed trees are more susceptible to diseases and insect infestations. When a tree becomes stressed, there may be many reasons why it has weakened like too much sunlight or over watering, which can cause the roots of the plant to rot from too much moisture in its soil. Trees should also be check for any injuries that could have been caused by open wounds on the tree's trunk. Insects and fungi crawl through easy access points into healthy wood tissue beneath bark as well as break other branches apart with their destructive feeding habits. When tree owners see anything suspicious on their beloved oak tree outside, especially if they are showing signs such as leaves turning brown or shedding them earlier than usual, it is best to invest in professional help quickly.

For property owners who care about their trees and landscape, Syracuse Tree Service Experts recommends these tips.

Check for oozing sap in tree trunks and branches. This is a sign that tree is unhealthy and infested with insects or diseases, which most likely will spread it to other plants around the yard.

Be careful to water trees only when needed. Check the soil to determine if the tree requires water. Over watering, is just as dangerous and can cause the trees' roots to rot. A tree can live for weeks without any water, especially during hot, dry weather.

Use fresh mulch around the trunk of the tree to reduce weeds and control moisture loss in the tree's root zone. Mulch is also a good thermal insulator to protect tree roots from temperature extremes and prevent freeze-and-thaw damage in winter.

Schedule an inspection for trees by a certified arborist at least once a year if the tree is more than 15-years-old. To assure trees remain healthy, it is vital that a professional tree care expert inspects them. "Arborist" is a general term and does not specify any particular level of competency. Only a Certified Arborist can provide a professional inspection, accurate diagnosis, and recommendation of an effective treatment plan to rid them of insects and disease.

Trees are a vital part of the environment that all should care for. However, as they grow older and larger in size, it becomes difficult to maintain the health of these magnificent plants without professional help. Property owners, whether residential or commercial, should consider hiring an arborist certified by ISA (International Society of Arboriculture) so their trees can continue living long and healthy lives.
