Ron's Amazing Products, based in Catonsville, Maryland, has announced that their most popular product, which is a camera that looks like an ink pen, has recently received more than 100 positive reviews on the Amazon marketplace. Ronald Hoff, owner and CEO of Ron's Amazing Products, commented on the milestone. He says, "We are proud to announce that the majority of our reviews are positive, which reflects the good quality of our product."

The customer reviews, which can be seen on the product's page at <http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B00G2TEKM2>, give in-depth information about using the pen camera as well. Most consumers who have purchased it claim that it is a relatively easy camera to use, and that the image and video quality is good. Ronald Hoff points out, "Not only are our customers happy with our product but they are also satisfied with our customer service. These reviews drive us to work harder to ensure that our customers are always completely satisfied with our services and products."

The camera pen is designed for consumers who may want to always have a camera on hand, but don't always have room to carry it. It is a workable pen that also captures pictures and high-quality video. These are features that apparently customers find appealing. Originally released a few months ago, Ron's Amazing Products recently upgraded their pen camera to provide it with higher quality and more features. Since the re-release, consumer reviews have been piling into Amazon on Ron's page, and the gist of those reviews are five stars.

The company works based on the philosophy that electronics should be fun as well as resourceful. The reasoning behind their camera pen is that since almost everyone carries a pen, it made sense to combine that pen into a camera, for those moments when people feel that they should have remembered to bring their camera along.

"It just made sense to us," states Ronald Hoff. Those who wish to learn more about Ron's Amazing Products can visit the company on their official website, or on their Amazon page where all currently offered products are listed.
