"This game has a lot you can keep yourself busy with, and those things are what we aim to cover here in Get Good At Golf- the complexities of the sport beyond the actual game. The history, preparations, fitness training, mindset required in playing, and the heart golf requires its players and others," said founder of Get Good At Golf, Joseph Hardison, who build the website to create a friendly space for both beginners and professionals alike when he found there to be not many websites that offer all the essential ideas that all levels of golfers may need in improving their gameplay.

The resources provided on the site revolve around ways to improve golf play techniques, and aid golfers in common issues they may face in their game. Besides, the site contains industry insights about new technologies and the latest news from the world of golf.

In addition to the services mentioned above, Get Good At Golf offers resources for new golfers to aid them in understanding the world of golf beyond the sport. Its golf tips section informs about health and fitness for golf, how-tos, improvement and golf lessons. According to the Get Good At Golf team, with the help of the resources offered on the site, golfers can bring about a significant improvement in their game.
