Brooklyn truck accident lawyer Samantha Kucher (<https://www.rrklawgroup.com/truck-accident-lawyer/>) releases a new article explaining the major differences between a truck accident and a car accident. The lawyer mentions in the article that truck accidents are the deadliest type of motor vehicle collisions. Truck crashes also account for about half of all automobile fatalities in America.

“It can be difficult to sort through all the confusion after a truck crash. However, it is important to notify the police and emergency personnel as soon as possible so they can assist and provide any necessary medical attention to injuries sustained from the crash,” says the Brooklyn truck accident lawyer.

The lawyer explains that in order for an incident to be filed as a claim, it is important that the police take statements from everyone involved and find any witness possible. All evidence should be documented as well, including photos of the damage or testimonies from the bystanders.

Attorney Samantha Kucher adds that it will be helpful to have a camera or a phone ready when documenting damages in a truck accident. Taking photos will help ensure that any details law enforcement might have missed are well documented by the individual involved in the accident.

In the article, attorney Kucher explains that the major differences between a truck accident and a car accident are that trucks have bigger insurance policy coverage than private vehicles. This means that insurance companies will do everything they can to avoid any liabilities in a truck accident. Commercial trucks also tend to have greater collateral damage in an accident, victims may have more significant injuries and bigger medical bills as well. Truck accidents also have a greater risk of death compared to car accidents.

According to attorney Kucher, "In general, if a truck driver was negligent and he/she caused an accident that injured or killed someone else, then he/she will likely be held responsible for damages to those victims. But the trucking company, any owners leasing and maintaining the vehicle, as well as any other parties involved in the accident may be partly responsible for damages."

Lastly, the lawyer emphasizes that it's very important to understand your rights when it comes to claiming compensation for a truck accident injury. Having an experienced lawyer may be able to help a victim navigate the complexities of the legal system.
