

Vancouver Furnace Repair Company Moves To New And Bigger Facility

November 10, 2015

November 10, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Canada Furnace Heating and Air Conditioning Ltd. has moved into a new facility in the Greater Vancouver area at Maple Ridge, British Columbia, Canada. The company has done so in an effort to branch out and expand business within the province. This has been reported as a huge change for the company, which has been operating out of their older facility since the mid 1990's, although Canada Furnace has been leading the HVAC industry in western Canada since the 1980's.

While the Vancouver furnace repair company has stated that the previous business space served its purpose well for many years, an increase in clientele and a need for more space has made it mandatory that the company transfer to a larger area. The new facility provides the company with more than 5000 square feet, and includes all of the makings of a superior office from which to operate the vehicles and staff that are needed for providing services. This is a big improvement from the previous smaller space which no longer provided enough room to house all of the participating team members and equipment required to meet customer demands.

Canada Furnace Heating and Air Conditioning has been candid in their hopes to uphold continued high levels of customer care and quality services. The company has been featured in B.C. Business Magazine in the past as one of the fastest growing private companies in the province, and was awarded in 2013 by the said magazine. They also currently hold an A+ Better Business Bureau rating. They have stated that this new facility will only offer more incentive and opportunity for their team to continue meeting these same benchmarks and ratings.

For more information on the new office, the company, and the services offered, the team encourages new and current clients to visit them online at Canada Furnace's Facebook page. The social media account provides access to updates on services, current promotions, sales events, and communication with the company and other consumers. This is also a place where potential customers can read reviews left by individuals and businesses, or create their own to share experiences regarding products and services.
