Visa Compare, a business based in London, United Kingdom, that helps people who want to emigrate, has recently released a new blog post that highlights the 10 best places in the world to work in. For each location mentioned, the blog post also highlights why it is such a good place for employment. This varies from sheer number of jobs to number of vacation days and more. The company aims to show people that the world is a big place with many opportunities out there.

"We now live in a global world," says Xi Lin from Visa Compare. "People often do not live their entire life in the place, or even country, they were born in anymore. They travel and they seek their fortunes all around the planet. We hope to give them a helping hand in terms of where to go with our new blog post. We really recommend that people read it."

The blog post, which can be accessed on <http://www.visacompare.com/blog/the-10-best-countries-to-work-in>, highlights the 10 best countries to work in as being Germany, Brazil, France, China, India, Austria, Singapore, the Netherlands, Italy and Switzerland. The reasons for these choices are also clearly highlighted. Depending on where someone is residing, a visa may be required in order to actually make the move to one of these countries.

"A UK resident could move to Germany, France, Austria, the Netherlands or Italy without the need for a visa," adds Xi Lin. "Other countries will require one. However, even if a visa is not required, it is important to be aware of the rules within those countries in terms of things like tax payments, bank accounts, medical provision, housing. and so on. We can help guide them through this process."

Whether someone wants to move to China or to Switzerland and whether they are from the USA or from Namibia, Visa Compare is there to help them. The also frequently release interesting information for people who are unsure about emigrating and just want to get some more details about the options that are available to them. The company's latest blog post is proving to be very popular already.
