Appliance Repair Company Launches Service That Helps People Avoid Ripoffs

December 10, 2015

December 10, 2015 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

A+ Appliance Repair, a business in Louisville, KY, has launched a new service that guarantees people will not be ripped off by their repair technicians. Unfortunately, there has been a surge of dishonest services out there, and this is putting the entire industry in a bad light. A+ Appliance Repair wants to turn this tide around, which they have achieved by making people aware of signs to look for and having properly trained technicians in place.

"There are some really terrible things happening in the world of appliance repair," adds Robert Steinborn. "There are now many repair people who say they are licensed, when they are actually not. This is why we have launched a new service that avoids all the common ripoffs. All our staff members are properly licensed and will never enter a property without showing this license. This is just the first step towards proving that we are genuine."

A number of common activities that are rip offs have recently come to light. This includes the 'cheeky check', whereby customers are encouraged to part with their money before the work is done. Another one is the 'breaker-breaker', in which case, if a repair person is left in the home alone, he or she will suddenly come up with a range of other damages. In most cases, the repair person will actually cause these damages while the person is out of the home. In contrast, A+ Appliance Repair service personnel will not ask for any payments before the work is completed, and they will only complete a job if the client, or a chosen representative of the client, is present on the property.

Another common rip off mentioned is the 'total failure', whereby a repair man will spot a small problem, but make the customer believe that the entire system is failing, enabling him to pocket extra money for himself. A+ Appliance Repair will always do a preliminary check of the system in the presence of the customer, so that they can find out what is actually broken.
