Jacksonville, FL: PC Faction, based in Florida, is proud to announce that active duty military members with a valid military ID will receive a 25% discount on computer repair services. 10-year military veteran and PC Faction founder Gerry Howe is well aware of both military pay and the need for quality computer services.

"I first became passionate about computers as a young Marine stationed at Camp Pendleton in 1996," PC Faction founder Gerry Howe said. "I didn't need to drive because all my Marine Corps buddies were buying cars, so I bought a computer instead. It was a whopping $2000.00 revolving charge with hefty monthly payments. I know first-hand what it is like to live off a military salary. Having been there and done that, I definitely empathize with military members today. It's really tough."

In today's day and age, having a well-functioning, personal computer in the military is a huge asset. From communicating with distant friends and family members to taking online college classes, many military members find it extremely distressing when something goes wrong with their computer. Common computer problems PC Faction resolves include malfunctioning hardware, viruses, pop-ups, spyware, adware, windows errors and system file corruption, cracked laptop screens, and much more.

PC Faction was built on military core values such as duty, integrity, and respect. No services are ever performed on a computer without a definitive "go ahead" from the client. PC Faction provides affordable flat-rate pricing, and clients are told exactly what a repair will cost before any work begins. If PC Faction cannot resolve the computer problem, the client is not charged.

"If I just wanted to make money, I would simply work for someone else," said Gerry. "I had the chance to give back to my community by providing a valuable and affordable service so I took it. I love to serve. Being able to help others who serve as well makes it all worthwhile."
