

GEDEasy Introduces National Database of GED Classes For The Students In U.S.

January 05, 2016

January 05, 2016 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

GEDEasy introduces a national database of GED Classes, which is a complete database of GED preparation facilities all across the nation. All facilities that offer GED preparation in the U.S. are listed on the GEDEasy website.

The database includes classes offered by community colleges, literacy councils, high schools, libraries, community action agencies, churches, and many other organizations committed to education and the improvement of the lives of those who were unfortunate enough to not finish their regular high school education. Earning a GED credential gives them the chance to further their education, improve their chances on the employment market, and become more successful in life.

"We welcome any organization that provides GED prep to contact us and get listed," says GEDEasy editor Darren Johnson.

Getting well prepared for the GED test has become increasingly important in 2016. The revamped GED exam is completely computer-based and a lot of students choose to prepare for the test independently by studying via online GED prep courses. However, only studying online for the GED test is not the right solution for many high school dropouts. Combining online learning with conventional GED classes can help bring much better results.

The GEDEasy.com database includes over 25,000 locations nationwide that provide GED preparation. Students can simply put the name of the city in the search form at <http://gedeasy.com/ged-classes/> and the GEDEasy website will provide a list of locations that offer GED classes in that area.

In the U.S., there are almost 2 million young adults in the age 16 to 21 that have not completed high school and are not signed up for any other school program. The effects of not having a secondary education degree are often disastrous on these individuals' careers, income, and social circumstances and estimates are that that for every dollar spent on dropout prevention will reap benefits of three to four times the money invested.

About GEDEasy

Since 2014, GEDEasy has been offering online GED classes for members-only. In December 2015, GED Easy acquired the Best GED Classes website, a leader in free online GED preparation and from now on they offer contemporary online GED preparation, totally free of charge.

Media contact:

Contact Name: Darren Johnson

Email: darren@gedeasy.com

Phone: (646) 863-4640

Website: <http://www.gedeasy.com>

###

For more information about GEDEasy, contact the company here:GEDEasy

GEDEasy

Powered by PressAdvantage.com