

Professor Watson Launches Groundbreaking Ethics Course to Transform Workplace Decision-Making

September 10, 2024

TUCSON, AZ - September 10, 2024 - PRESSADVANTAGE -

Professor Greg Watson is excited to introduce a new course that aims to deepen students' understanding of workplace ethics. The course, BUS148: Ethics in the Workplace, caters to a broad range of students, from those at the start of their careers to experienced professionals looking to improve their ethical decision-making skills.

This course will focus on real-world scenarios to help students understand the complex nature of making ethical choices at work. By looking at different case studies and participating in meaningful discussions, students will learn how to handle ethical issues they might face in their jobs.

"We've designed BUS148: Ethics in the Workplace to address the increasing need for ethical awareness in professional settings," said Professor Greg Watson. "Each module is crafted to ensure that students not only learn theoretical aspects but also understand how to apply these principles practically."

The course covers a wide range of topics, such as corporate responsibility, managing conflicts of interest, and the role of ethics in leadership. Students will also learn about creating an inclusive work environment and handling whistleblowing situations responsibly. The goal is to give students a well-rounded perspective on workplace ethics that can be applied in various industries.

Each module includes interactive elements like quizzes, group discussions, and real-life case studies. These activities are designed to keep students engaged and encourage active participation, making the learning experience more dynamic. The course is available online, so students can learn at their own pace on <https://professorwatson.com/>.

Professor Greg Watson has been a teacher for over twenty years, focusing on business ethics and leadership. His expertise is recognized by many academic institutions and professional organizations. "Ethics should be at the forefront of every professional's mind," said Watson. "With this new course, we hope to instill a strong ethical foundation in our students, which they can carry throughout their careers."

BUS148: Ethics in the Workplace also highlights the importance of ethical leadership. By studying different leadership styles and their effects on organizational culture, students will learn how to lead by example and inspire ethical behavior in their teams. The course aims to develop leaders who are not only effective but also principled and accountable.

In addition to Professor Watson's lectures, the course includes guest speakers from different industries. These professionals will share their experiences and insights, providing students with a variety of perspectives on workplace ethics. This mix of academic and practical knowledge helps connect theory to real-world application.

The course also encourages students to research and present their thoughts on ethical issues, promoting a deeper understanding and critical thinking. By engaging with current ethical challenges, students will be better prepared to address these issues in their professional lives.

In summary, BUS148: Ethics in the Workplace is a valuable addition to any educational journey. It provides essential knowledge and skills for dealing with the complexities of modern professional environments. As ethical considerations become more important, this course offers timely and relevant content to help students make informed and ethical decisions in their careers.

"Understanding ethics in the workplace is more important than ever," said Professor Watson. "With the launch of this course, we're committed to providing students with the resources they need to succeed and lead with integrity."

By integrating theoretical learning with practical application, BUS148: Ethics in the Workplace sets a new standard for ethics education. This course is a significant step in preparing students to meet the ethical challenges of today's workplace.
