?Opening an office in Durham is more than just business growth; it?s about expanding our reach to ensure more people have access to the resources they need to maintain a healthy indoor environment,? Shelton explained. ?At SafeAir, we believe that education is just as important as the services we provide. SafeAir Mold Testing?s inspection process begins with a thorough visual assessment of the property, including hard-to-reach areas where mold can thrive unnoticed. The company?s comprehensive reports detail the types and concentrations of mold present and provide clear guidance for addressing any issues.

With the new Durham office, the company is better positioned to respond quickly to inquiries and provide prompt service, which is especially crucial in emergency situations or when real estate transactions are involved.

SafeAir Mold Testing?s decision to open in Durham reflects the company?s recognition of the region?s growing population and diverse property landscape. The combination of historic homes, new developments, and varied climates makes the area susceptible to moisture-related issues that can lead to mold growth. By establishing a local presence, SafeAir aims to be a reliable partner for Durham residents and business owners facing these challenges.

The company is also dedicated to community engagement. As part of the launch, SafeAir Mold Testing will participate in local events, offer educational resources on mold prevention, and provide consultations to inform the public about the importance of indoor air quality.
