

National University Los Angeles Enhances Flexible Degree Programs for Working Professionals

August 06, 2026

LOS ANGELES, CA - August 06, 2026 -

National University in Los Angeles continues to strengthen its position as a leading provider of flexible higher education options designed specifically for working adults and non-traditional students throughout Southern California. The institution's comprehensive approach to accessible education combines accelerated four-week courses with fully online learning platforms, enabling students to pursue bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees while maintaining their professional and personal commitments.

The West Los Angeles-based private, non-profit institution offers more than 75 degree programs across seven distinct academic areas, including business administration, healthcare and nursing, engineering and technology, criminal justice, teaching and education, social sciences and psychology, and arts and humanities. Each program incorporates industry-relevant curriculum designed to prepare graduates for immediate application in their chosen fields.

"Working professionals in Los Angeles face unique challenges when pursuing higher education, from traffic and commute times to demanding work schedules," said a spokesperson for National University. "Our accelerated course format and online delivery methods remove traditional barriers to education, allowing students to complete their degrees on their own timeline while gaining practical skills they can apply immediately in their careers."

The university's Bachelor of Science in Information Systems program exemplifies this practical approach, combining technical expertise in programming, database management, and networking with essential business concepts. This integration prepares graduates to navigate the complex intersection of technology and business operations in modern organizations. Similarly, the healthcare and nursing programs address the growing demand for qualified medical professionals in the Los Angeles metropolitan area, offering pathways from bachelor's degrees through doctoral programs.

National University's commitment to accessibility extends beyond scheduling flexibility. The institution maintains veteran-owned status and has established itself as an LGBTQ+ friendly campus, fostering an inclusive environment for all students. Located at 5230 Pacific Concourse Drive in Los Angeles, the university serves students throughout Southern California and beyond through its robust online learning infrastructure.

"The traditional university model often excludes capable individuals who cannot commit to rigid class schedules or extended semester formats," added the spokesperson. "By offering four-week courses that students can take one at a time, we enable focused learning that fits into real life. This approach has proven particularly effective for military personnel, parents, and professionals seeking career advancement or transition."

The university's engineering and technology programs have experienced notable growth, reflecting the increasing demand for skilled professionals in cybersecurity, data science, and computer engineering. These programs maintain strong connections with Los Angeles area employers, ensuring curriculum remains aligned with industry needs and employment opportunities.

National University operates as a regionally accredited institution offering associate through doctoral degrees across multiple disciplines. The university's focus on career-oriented education has established it as a resource for adult learners seeking to advance their careers, change professional directions, or complete previously started degrees. With programs in high-demand fields such as healthcare administration, organizational leadership, and clinical psychology, the institution continues to adapt its offerings to meet evolving workforce needs in the Los Angeles region and throughout California.
