Crane Business Solutions' Owner Michael Crane offers advice for business owners on how to choose the perfect furniture for their office. In his newest blog post, he explains what it takes to select the right chairs and desks for maximum comfort and style.

He argues that this is no small matter. When people are uncomfortable when they're trying to work, they're distracted and won't be able to do their best work. So it really pays to make an effort to invest in office furniture that will keep people comfortable as they spend hours every weekday sitting at their desks.

A comfortable workspace starts with the right chair. Ideally, everyone would get an ergonomic chair, but that can be prohibitively expensive. Instead, an adjustable chair of the right height and size for the person who'll be using it will be a close second. It should also have ample upholstery.

Crane continues to discuss how to select the right desk, taking into consideration the various tasks that might be performed at a desk. Some people won't need a whole lot of work space because they're mostly on the phone or type on a computer. Others generate a lot of paperwork, or need to refer to lots of documents, so they'll need more space.

A sofa may also be part of an office's furnishings, whether in the executive suite or in the reception area. It could also have a place in the break area.

The challenge is to actually select the right chair, desk, or sofa. Crane recommends that his customers test-drive the furniture. Nothing can replace actually sitting on the sofa or the chair when it comes to deciding whether it's comfortable and a good fit.

Crane's customers have the opportunity to try out most furniture at one or more of Crane's several showrooms in the Central London area. They can call Crane's customer service team to find out which of the showrooms would have the type of furniture they're interested in and will be directed to the best showroom for their needs. Once they have selected what they want, their furniture arrives quickly.

Crane Business Solutions is a one-stop-shop for anything a business would need to perform at its best, and that includes office furniture. Choosing the right furniture for the office is crucial for success. Crane and his team work hard at making that task as easy as possible, with a comprehensive catalogue, lots of advice, and the showrooms.
