All Pro Thornton Deck Builders Expands Residential Deck Service Area to Superior

September 25, 2026

THORNTON, CO - September 25, 2026 -
All Pro Thornton Deck Builders has extended its residential and commercial deck construction services to Superior, Colorado, broadening a Front Range operation into Boulder County to serve a growing base of homeowners seeking outdoor living space. The move adds Superior to a service footprint that already spans much of the north Denver metropolitan area.

The expansion responds to sustained demand for decks, patio covers, and related outdoor structures in the region, where residential construction and reconstruction have continued in the years following the December 2021 Marshall Fire that destroyed hundreds of homes in Superior and neighboring communities. Property owners rebuilding or upgrading homes have increasingly sought contractors familiar with Boulder County permitting and inspection requirements.

"The expansion into Superior reflects steady interest from homeowners across Boulder County who want durable outdoor structures built to local code," said David Miller, owner of All Pro Thornton Deck Builders. Superior projects will follow the same design, permitting, and construction practices already applied across the Thornton region, according to the company.

Services now available to Superior residents include the design and construction of ground-level and elevated decks, multi-level structures, composite and pressure-treated wood decking, railings, stairs, and covered outdoor areas. Project work covers new installations as well as the repair and replacement of existing decks that have deteriorated through age or weather exposure.

Superior sits along the U.S. Route 36 corridor between Denver and Boulder, a stretch that has seen steady population growth and new housing over the past decade. The town's mix of newer subdivisions and rebuilt homes has created a range of project types, from decks on recently constructed houses to replacements on older properties.

Each project begins with an on-site assessment, followed by material selection, permitting where required, and construction scheduled around local inspection timelines. Composite decking has grown in use among area homeowners because of its lower maintenance requirements compared with traditional wood, though both options remain available depending on budget and design preference.

Deck construction in the region is shaped by seasonal weather, with much of the work concentrated in the warmer months when ground conditions and temperatures suit concrete footings and fastening. The company indicated that project timelines in Superior would account for those conditions along with the availability of composite and lumber materials, which have fluctuated in cost in recent years.

"Serving Superior allows the same construction standards used across the Thornton area to reach additional Boulder County neighborhoods," Miller said. The addition extends the company's service radius westward and positions it to take on projects in a market where outdoor living improvements have become a routine part of residential renovation.

Superior has recorded substantial residential rebuilding activity in recent years, and outdoor construction has formed part of that work as households restore or improve their properties. Demand for decks across Colorado's Front Range has tracked broader interest in usable outdoor space, a trend that grew during the period of increased time spent at home earlier in the decade and has held steady since.

The company also cited material durability and code compliance as factors shaping current projects, noting that railing height, load capacity, and stair dimensions are governed by local building standards that vary between jurisdictions. Familiarity with those standards in Superior and the wider Boulder County area was described as a central reason for formalizing service there rather than treating the town as an occasional destination for work.

The expansion does not involve a new physical office in Superior; work will be managed from the company's existing Thornton-area operation, with crews traveling to project sites. That structure keeps overhead consistent while extending coverage to a community roughly a half-hour drive to the west.

All Pro Thornton Deck Builders continues to operate from its base in the Thornton area while accepting projects in Superior and the surrounding communities, with scheduling handled through its existing intake process.
