

Neal & Solevilla Personal Injury Lawyers Highlights Need for Experienced Representation in Truck Accident Claims

August 13, 2026

Clearwater, FL - August 13, 2026 -

Neal & Solevilla Personal Injury Lawyers, a personal injury law firm in Clearwater, Florida, has issued a statement drawing attention to the specialized legal challenges facing individuals who have been injured in collisions involving commercial trucks. The firm points to the distinct complexities of these cases, including multiple potentially liable parties, federal trucking regulations, and the substantial resources that trucking companies and their insurers bring to disputes.

Commercial truck collisions differ significantly from standard passenger vehicle accidents. Cases can involve trucking companies, drivers, maintenance providers, and cargo loaders, each of whom may bear a portion of responsibility. Determining fault often requires a detailed review of driver logs, vehicle maintenance records, electronic data recorders, and compliance with hours-of-service rules established by federal regulators. According to the statement, these factors underscore why injured parties often turn to the guidance of a truck accident lawyer at Neal & Solevilla Personal Injury Lawyers who understands the regulatory framework governing the industry.

The firm notes that trucking companies frequently deploy investigators and legal teams to the scene of a serious crash within hours, working to limit their exposure. Injured individuals, by contrast, are often focused on recovery and medical treatment, leaving them at a disadvantage when negotiating with insurance representatives. Timely investigation and the preservation of evidence can play a meaningful role in the outcome of a claim.

Katherine C. Neal, a founding attorney at the firm, addressed the reasoning behind the statement. "Truck accident claims are among the most demanding cases in personal injury law because of the number of parties involved and the volume of technical evidence that must be examined," Neal said. "People who have been seriously hurt deserve to understand the full scope of what these cases require before they accept an early settlement offer."

Neal added that education is a central part of the firm's purpose in raising the issue. "The goal is to help injured people and their families recognize that trucking cases follow different rules than ordinary car accidents," Neal said. "Knowing that difference early can make a substantial impact on how a case unfolds."

Neal & Solevilla Personal Injury Lawyers assists clients with gathering evidence, negotiating with insurance companies, and pursuing compensation for medical expenses, rehabilitation costs, lost income, and pain and suffering. In cases that cannot be resolved through negotiation, the firm represents clients in court. The firm works toward holding responsible parties accountable and securing the financial support that injured individuals need to recover.

Beyond trucking cases, the firm handles a range of personal injury matters, including car accidents, motorcycle accidents, bicycle accidents, rideshare accidents, premises liability, brain and spinal cord injury claims, and wrongful death. The firm serves clients throughout the Clearwater area and the surrounding region.

Neal & Solevilla Personal Injury Lawyers is led by attorneys Katherine C. Neal and Melissa D. Solevilla. The firm represents individuals who have been injured through the negligence of others, working to help clients receive appropriate medical care and fair compensation. The firm approaches each matter with the aim of achieving accountability for those it represents.
