

Single and the City Highlights Renewed Interest in Speed Dating Among NYC Singles

August 12, 2026 -

Single and the City, a woman-owned company that organizes singles parties, speed dating, and themed social events, reports a notable rise in participation as more singles turn away from dating apps in favor of face-to-face encounters. The shift reflects a broader movement among urban singles who are seeking more authentic ways to meet potential partners.

Over the past several months, the company has observed increased attendance at its in-person gatherings, particularly its speed dating sessions. Industry observers have pointed to growing fatigue with digital dating platforms, where endless swiping and text-based communication often fail to translate into meaningful connections. In response, singles are returning to structured, real-world events where conversation and chemistry can develop naturally.

Speed dating, a format in which participants engage in a series of brief one-on-one conversations, has emerged as a central part of this resurgence. The structure allows attendees to meet many potential partners in a single evening and to assess compatibility through direct interaction rather than curated online profiles. Single and the City in NYC has expanded its schedule of these events to accommodate the demand, adding sessions that cater to a range of ages, interests, and communities, including LGBTQ+ speed dating nights.

"People are craving genuine, in-person connection in a way they have not in years," said a spokesperson for Single and the City. "There is something about sitting across from someone and having a real conversation that no app can replicate. The energy at recent events has confirmed that singles want to step away from their screens and meet people in the real world."

The company's events extend beyond traditional speed dating. Themed gatherings such as Fleet Week Mixers, silent discos, yacht parties, and holiday celebrations provide varied settings for singles to meet one another. Each event is designed to create a relaxed and welcoming atmosphere, with music, activities, and icebreakers intended to ease the initial awkwardness that can accompany meeting new people.

"The variety of our events means there is something for nearly everyone," the spokesperson added. "Whether someone prefers the fast pace of speed dating or the casual feel of a themed party, the goal remains the same: to help people connect in a fun and comfortable environment."

Alongside its events, the company offers dating consulting services for individuals seeking guidance on conversation skills and dating strategies. This combination of live events and personal coaching reflects a comprehensive approach to helping singles navigate the modern dating landscape.

The renewed enthusiasm for in-person events comes at a time when many observers are questioning the long-term effectiveness of app-based dating. As singles increasingly prioritize authentic interaction, organizations that facilitate real-world meetings appear well positioned to meet the moment.

Single and the City organizes singles parties and speed dating in New York City. The company aims to provide an engaging environment where singles can meet, connect, and potentially find lasting relationships. Its offerings include speed dating, themed singles events, dating consulting, and special seasonal gatherings, along with a VIP service that provides access to exclusive events and priority booking.
